

A COMMERCIAL PAIN: Kevin Csatlós recently discovered what it was like to be king one day and dirt the day after when he went to Hollywood to film a Tylenol commercial. "That was an experience of a lifetime," said Csatlós, whose company, Premiere Mobile Gyms, was featured in the spot about muscle aches and pains. "You are really somebody for a week. There was nothing they won't do for you. But when they were done, you are nobody. It's like, Kevin who?" The commercial is currently airing. . . . Adventures of the Zordine Warriors, a locally produced film, is on its way to the Cannes Film Festival. Produced and written by Valley residents, Jim Thompson and Robert Hunt, partners in Newport Films of Phoenix, the action-adventure children's movie about a mystical land and its lost defenders was filmed entirely in the Valley. . . . Howard Stern managed to slip into Arizona last week unnoticed. Stern vacationed at the Boulders and in Sedona with his wife, Alison. Stern airs locally on KHOT (FM 100.3), and KGME (1360 AM).

HOLE LOT OF CHEESE: It took 90 pounds and three varieties of Swiss cheeses to melt enough for the 150 dip-and-swirlers at Sunday's third annual Giant Swiss Fondue Party at the Paradise Valley residence of Max and Elisabeth Haechler. This year's event included music by the Scottsdale Community College Monday Knight Band. The 17-piece ensemble, selected to play during the 1995 Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland, will perform a free concert at 8 p.m. Monday in the college's amphitheater, 9000 E. Chaparral Road, Scottsdale. Info: 423-6325. . . . Phoenix artist Richard Ozanne has been given an honorary award from the International Biographical Institute of Cambridge, England. Ozanne, who describes himself as a modern artist with a classical background, has a master's degree from ASU, but he doesn't show his work locally. "I try to keep a distance between myself and the viewing of my work," he says. . . . Architect Paolo Soleri has been called a genius and a crackpot. Regardless of which camp you're in, you may want to see the amphitheater he's designed for Glendale Community College. Groundbreaking is Thursday at 4 p.m.
